(#1) I want to thank everyone who has visited this site, taken the time to learn the facts, shared the link, and spread the word. My Family and I have been through a lot these past 3 years and counting. And while we have specific reasons to feel hopeful, the fact remains that I am still not free. It's not a simple thing getting the attention of the leader of the free world. Thus far we've failed, but haven't stopped trying. I've been writing to President Trump since 2023 when this all began. Even before he had secured the Republican nomination for his current term. None of us can know what it will take to finally reach him, but I have faith that whenever that day comes, this nightmare will end in short order.

(#2) I've had no alternative but to watch Russian state news for the past 3 years. When I was kidnapped they were alluding to World War III. Once Trump took power all of that changed. Putin himself stated publicly that the current relationship between the U.S. and Russia has now risen to such an unprecedented level that "greeting President Trump in Moscow for a state visit will demand more than simply sitting down for tea." Once President Trump learns the details and sees for himself the evidence of my case, he won't need more than a moment to know what to do. It is obvious. It is documented. It's on video, audio, in written form, and thus, undeniable. He will be as outraged as he should be. He will call President Putin asking simply this: "Are you aware of what your people have been doing to my citizen?" They will have a brief discussion. They will make a deal. Then I will go home. I have a sneaking suspicion that those responsible for my setup weren't acting under executive orders. They're exactly what the Senior Investigator of their region's Investigative Committee called them, "bad cops." It's probable they'll soon learn what it's like living where they put me. Love, Travis
